Many parts of Asia lack adequate infrastructure and skilled human resources, but have large populations and the potential for rapid growth. A comprehensive regional approach will work best to meet the growing demands of infrastructure, manufacturing, services and human resources. Using modern management capabilities, a model for collaboration between Japan and India can be developed for Asia, in which Japan can lead in terms of technology and capital, and India can lead from the global human resources end. This could be a winning recipe for growth in Asia. This indeed will be an underlying theme in the recent bilateral discussions between the two prime ministers.

FICCI led the first ever partnership with the Overseas Human Resources and Industry Development Association (HIDA) in India on Skills Training and organized management training program for leadership and leaders. This programme was hosted by All India Organisation of Employers' (AIOE), an allied body of FICCI.

Some of the opportunity areas for collaboration with Japan are:

- Developing transnational skills standards, recognition of certificates
- Sharing of best practices on industry engagement, technology application and quality control specific to manufacturing
- Establishment of Centre of Excellence in potential sectors such as automotive, electronics etc.
- Capacity Building of Trainers and Skill Infrastructure
