Sugar mills rush export deals on record-low rupee, rising global prices
Indian sugar mills have returned to the export market, locking in 100,000 metric tons of shipments in a week after a slump in the rupee to a record low and a rally in global prices restored the economics of overseas sales, five dealers told Reuters. Shipments from the world's second biggest sugar producer will help Asian and African consumers to secure sugar at lower prices amid rising freight and global prices, which are trading near the highest level in five months.

Input costs may deny exporters edge gained from rupee at record low. Textiles, leather, agro products, carpets may benefit
The rupee's fall to a record low of 93.86 against the dollar may offer a modest competitive edge to exporters, but rising input costs are likely to offset the gains, industry executives said. The depreciation could support exports of textiles, leather, agro products, carpets, handicrafts and some engineering goods. Almost 60% of India's goods trade is in dollars and the depreciation will help traditional sectors such as textiles and leather that have low dependence on imports.
