India-UK FTA comes into force: Industry hails 'landmark moment' for bilateral trade

Business and industry groups across India and the UK welcomed the free trade agreement (FTA) coming into force on Wednesday, which is set to unleash a flurry of tariff cuts that will catalyse bilateral trade through greater two-way movement of goods and services, according to a PTI report. The Comprehensive Economic and Trade Agreement (CETA) was signed between Prime Minister Narendra Modi and his UK counterpart Keir Starmer in July last year, following 14 rounds of negotiations. It is expected to at least double the trade between the two countries from the current annual levels of an estimated 48 billion pounds by 2030, and also boost their GDPs by nearly 5 billion pounds every year in the long run, the report said.

The Central Board of Indirect Taxes and Customs (CBIC) on Monday issued guidelines for the implementation of self-certification of origin declarations under the India-UK Comprehensive Economic and Trade Agreement, which will come into force on July 15. India-UK CETA duty benefits to require CBIC digital authentication
India will allow preferential duty benefits under the India-UK Comprehensive Economic and Trade Agreement (CETA) only after customs digitally authenticates a UK exporter's self-certified origin declaration and issues a Unique Reference Number (URN), introducing a new pre-clearance verification layer as the trade pact comes into force on July 15. The Central Board of Indirect Taxes and Customs (CBIC) on Monday operationalised the mechanism through a circular that replaces the conventional government-issued certificate of origin with a self-certification regime backed by electronic authentication. Importers must quote the URN in the Bill of Entry to claim lower CETA tariffs. The framework is intended to prevent impersonation, duplicate use of declarations and fraudulent preferential duty claims without reverting to government-issued certificates.

Downstream aluminium bodies seek lower import duty on primary aluminium
Two downstream aluminium industry bodies have urged the Ministry of Mines to reduce the effective Customs duty on primary aluminium, saying the current tariff structure has enabled import-parity pricing by domestic producers, raising input costs and eroding the profitability of micro, small and medium enterprises (MSMEs). In a joint representation submitted to the ministry on July 14, the Cable and Conductor Manufacturers Association of India (Cacmai) and the Federation of All India Aluminium Utensils Manufacturers said the effective import duty of 8.25 per cent on primary aluminium has become "a critical burden on downstream manufacturers" and sought its immediate rationalisation.

US imposes 25% tariff on some Brazilian imports over unfair trade practices

IEA sees $6.5 trillion at risk if China imposes rare-earth curbs
China's rare earth export curbs could put $6.5 trillion of downstream production outside the country at risk each year if fully implemented, the International Energy Agency warned in a report on rare earths and critical minerals.To address those weaknesses, the report argues that countries should work multilaterally to stockpile 11 "high-risk" materials. That would require an initial purchase of $9.2 billion and with a net annual cost of $900 million, the agency said. While the figures are "significant," they are "quickly dwarfed" by the potential impact of supply disruptions, it said.

Inadequate, insufficient evidence on forced labour 301 probe: India tells US
India has told the US that the United States Trade Representative (USTR) determination of 12.5% tariff under Section 301 investigation into forced labour concerns, does not provide a rationale for countrywide tariffs and impermissibly clubs 46 economies into a single category. At a public hearing on July 8 at the USTR, New Delhi said there is inadequate and insufficient evidence that lack of forced labour import ban causes an unfair competitive advantage to the detriment of the American industry.
