The Methodology for Defining and Classifying Stroke Centers

The researchers used the following criteria and process:

1. Classification of Centers

Stroke centers were categorized into two primary levels based on the specific treatments they offer:

* Intravenous Thrombolysis (IVT) Centers: Hospitals equipped to administer "clot-busting" medication (thrombolysis).
* Mechanical Thrombectomy (EVT) Centers: Advanced centers capable of performing endovascular thrombectomy (EVT) to physically remove clots from the brain.

2. Data Collection and Geo-tagging

* Source of Information: The team compiled a comprehensive list of hospitals across India by contacting state health departments, professional medical bodies (like the Indian Stroke Association), and individual neurologists.
* Verification: Each facility was verified for its "stroke-readiness," which included having 24/7 CT scan availability and the necessary medical specialists (neurologists or trained physicians) to perform reperfusion.
* Geocoding: The physical addresses of these verified hospitals were converted into geographic coordinates (latitude and longitude) to create a nationwide map of stroke care infrastructure.

3. Catchment and Access Analysis

* Travel-Time Modeling: Using Geographic Information System (GIS) software and road network data (often from sources like Google Maps or OpenStreetMap), the study calculated how much of the population lived within certain "time-windows" from these centers.
* Golden Hour Benchmarks: The primary focus was on identifying the percentage of the population that could reach an IVT center within 60 minutes (the Golden Hour) and an EVT center within 120 minutes.
* Population Integration: They overlaid this travel-time data with high-resolution population density maps (such as WorldPop) to estimate exactly how many people in each state were "covered" by the existing network.

4. Categorization of Gaps

The methodology specifically looked for "stroke care deserts"—regions where the nearest center was several hours away—to highlight the urban-rural disparities in emergency medical access across different Indian states.
